Life's Returns

"Life owes me life," one said. "And meat and bread: Beauty and friendship, too: Strength for the work I do." Then sat him down to wait "Till life should find his gate. "Till life went marching on. "Till youth and strength were gone. "Till friendship had long since fled. "The begging hand outspread, "Beauty, disconsolate. "Had withered by his gate. "Another said: "Each day "My debt to life I'll pay. "Some small return I'll make "For every hour I take. "With every hurt and blow "Stronger I'll try to grow. "As life became a thing "As glorious as the spring, "Edged with achievement's gold. "And friendship's young and old. "Eyes bright and hearts elate "And beauty round the gate. "—Selected.

PAR IS LOVE

BY EDWIN R. BROWN

Yesterday's Royalty meets the girl of his dreams. And she had two answers who are going to play off a golf match to determine who wins her. He asks if it is a private romance!

CHAPTER II

SHE gave him a look that made him think of violets with dew on them. "Oh, very private. Just Ronald and Wilfrid."

"What does your father say," he asked, "to your settling your life by a golf match between two clubs?"

"Oh, father. He doesn't know anything about the match. He says a lot of things, though."

"He does, eh? What, for instance?"

"The girl appeared to think. 'Well, he says he wishes I'd hurry up and marry one of those cussed boys so the other would get the devil out of the house. He says two wrongs never make a right.'"

"Your dad knows his stuff. I begin to gather that he's not too hot about Ronald and Wilfrid."

"No. One of them got his goat, but he doesn't know which so he blames them both."

"Got his goat? How do you mean?"

"Well, the other day Ron put a skeleton in Wilfrid's room. It was sort of a dumb thing to do. And the worst of it is, he put one of father's top hats on the skeleton."

"What did he do that for? Just for fun and stuff?"

"Oh, he told me he thought it might shake Wilfrid's nerve. Rattle him for the match, you know."

"Hm! It should have. Whose skeleton was it? Not the family's?"

"No. Er—that is, it belonged to father."

"I see. Your father has skeletons. What's he do, go in for collecting them?"

"That's it. Father is an evolutionist and a paleontologist. Just as a hobby, you know. He used to be a banker. But this was one of his favorite skeletons."

FOR a moment they sat silent. "Well," said Royalty, reluctantly. "I really ought to be going. But I've sort of gotten interested in this. There's a couple more things I'd like to know, if it wouldn't be presuming."

"Shoot," said the girl, drawing circles in the dust with the toe of her slipper.

"Well, why did you tell me, a perfect stranger, all this?"

"She faced him. 'If you want to know, it's because I haven't a single solitary soul in that house to talk to.'"

"No? Gee, that's tough luck."

"But it's true. You see, I can't talk to mother about Ronald and Wilfrid. She's a great friend of their mother. And father's against me because I'm going to marry either Ron or Wilfrid. My brother Billy is just a kid. And I couldn't confide in the maids or Baskerville."

"Who's Baskerville?"

"He's the chauffeur."

"No," said Royalty Augustus, hesitatingly, remembering reading about a chauffeur who ran away with an heiress, "don't talk to Baskerville. I think you did quite right to tell me."

"And," she continued, "we're way out here in the country miles from any of my friends. So I've got to let off steam where and when I can."

"I've got a suggestion to make," said Royalty, with a Machiavellian gleam in his eye. "Why don't you call off this match? That is, unless you're wild about either Ronald or Wilfrid, or both."

She looked away. "I couldn't do that. I've committed myself."

CHURCH OF CHRIST
J. A. Copeland, Minister

We are very grateful for the large crowds that have attended our revival, and the fine spirit and interest that have been manifested.

We are also greatly encouraged by the splendid number that have been added to our congregation by conversions and restorations.

Now we have our new class members, and a goodly number of new members, we are better prepared for the work of the Lord than we have ever been before.

There will be one more service in the meeting, which will be tonight at 8:15 p. m. Come and hear this last sermon of this plain gospel preacher.

Now let us continue the regular work with renewed zeal and courage. Let us urge all of the members to be on hand at 10 o'clock Sunday morning for Bible study, and if you can, bring some one with you to investigate the Bible with us. Subject for the Sunday morning service will be, "Spiritual Growth."

Young People's Bible Class will be at 7:15 p. m. Sermon 8:15. Come and we will do you good.

Royalty Augustus helped. In so doing he shattered all existing records for slowness in assisting young ladies over bunkers.

now. But as for Ron and Wilfrid I spring—well, they're very sweet of course...

"But you're not exactly steamed up over them, eh?"

HER eyes raked his. "I won't answer that. But I'll tell you this much: Mother thinks it would be very suitable. She pegged away at me until I had to ask the twins here for the summer in order to get some peace."

"Good Lord! For all summer?"

"Yes. I guess she believes in propriety. Well, it works like a charm. I got so sick of turning down Ronald before breakfast, Wilfrid before lunch and both before dinner that I finally gave in. And—oh, you know the rest."

"By the way," said Royalty suddenly, "what's your name?"

"Barbara Ganning. What's yours?"

"Herring. Roy Herring. You know, Miss Ganning, I'm beginning to be sort of sorry that I won't be here to see this match."

"What good would that do?"

"Well, at least I'd know who won. Also I could—well, I mean to say, I could fill in between now and Saturday. Give you someone to talk to while the twins are cutting up golf balls."

She was silent a minute. "It's a thought," she said at last. "On the whole, I think I need someone. I'm fed up with the talent in that house."

Royalty Augustus Herring made a lightning decision. "Then I'm going to stay," he announced. "That is, if you want me to."

"I wish you could," she said. "Well, why can't I? I'm on a vacation. And if it would do you any good, I'd be delighted. I suppose there's a hotel somewhere around."

She shook her head. "Not a decent one for miles."

"That's awkward," he said. "Well, I'm glad to try an indecent one."

"You could stay in the house," said Barbara slowly. "I could say you're a boy I met out in Colorado. I visited out there last year."

The great apostle reviews his life. It is a great thing to have the privilege of the innermost confidences of a great man as he looks back upon a remarkable career and appraises his course of action. Paul's career had not been without many without serious crises and dangers. The great crisis of his life had come when he found Christ on the way to Damascus and a light broke in upon his inner soul, the effect of which at first was to bring upon him physical blindness. In this new-found faith—which was safer all not so much a new faith as an enlargement of the religion in which he had been brought up, for he declared that he still worshiped the God of his fathers—Paul launched out on his great preaching ministry.

He wanted to share with others the glory that he had found, and nothing could stop him in his determination to preach the Gospel of good news.

Paul had set out for himself a large task and a supreme goal, and it is in the spirit of one who had lived largely that he surveys his life. He speaks of his persecutions and of his situation at that very time, in bonds, as a prisoner.

Far from feeling that his life had been a failure because of this bondage, he rejoices that through his willingness to suffer others had become more bold and courageous in speaking "the word of God without fear."

Paul reveals the inner secret of his life quite clearly in these self-revelations. His strength is in the fact of the indwelling Christ. Elsewhere he spoke of his weakness and of the thorn in the flesh that had buffeted him. It was in this weakness that a divine voice had spoke to him, saying, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

Paul was now an old man, and it is

Capitol Sprinkler System Dedicated

Senator George Steel of Nashville Formally Turns Faucet

LITTLE ROCK.—(P)—The new $10,000 underground sprinkler system at the Capitol lawn was turned on formally Thursday by Senator George Steel of Nashville following a dedication service on the statehouse steps.

Steel, who sponsored the appropriation bill in the last general assembly to provide for the system, asserted "we country people are as proud of this Capitol's beauty and improvements as the citizens of Little Rock."

A few minutes after he turned the master faucet controlling the system, the front lawn was enveloped in a vast spray.

J. N. Heiskell, editor of the Arkansas Gazette and member of the state planning board, made the principal address. He predicted the Capitol grounds would be expanded to eventually include all territory on the hill surmounted by the building.

State Highway Director W. W. Mitchell told the audience the system covered 11 acres and was four and one half miles in length. He was chairman of the sprinkler commission.

The dedication was arranged by Secretary of State C. G. Hall who publicly thanked the WPA laborers who worked on the project and praised them for their energy in keeping the construction on schedule.

Other speakers were Charles L. Thompson, Little Rock, chairman of the state planning board, State WPA Administrator Floyd Sharp, Mrs. Roddy Jones, president of the Little Rock Federation of Garden Clubs, D. Hodson Lewis, Little Rock Chamber of Commerce manager, Herbert Thomas, chairman of the Little Rock municipal waterworks.

Mrs. Robinson Gets L. R. Post Office Job

LITTLE ROCK.—Mrs. Ewilda M. Robinson, widow of Senator Joe T. Robinson, was nominated by President Roosevelt Thursday to be permanent postmaster of Little Rock. Her appointment was sent to the Senate for confirmation, together with those of several hundred other postmasters.

Mrs. Robinson has been serving under temporary appointment since March, 1938. She was one of the three top-ranking candidates among nine who took a competitive examination given by the United States Civil Service Commission for the appointment.

She was appointed to the position after the death of C. C. Kavanaugh, postmaster here for several years. The position is one of the few postmasterhips which President Roosevelt has filled by personal appointment. Under a new law she will serve "without term," or for life, and will be subject to removal only for malfeasance in office. Repeal of this provision of the present law governing appointments to postmasterhips is being sought by Republican leaders.

no wonder that he was somewhat perplexed as to whether it was better to go on in the earthly warfare or to find the rest in Christ—that he felt sure was the reward of the Christian after death. But in this perplexity, there was the one certain and unshakable purpose. He was determined to press on to the goal of possessing Christ and of being possessed by Christ. This was the goal of "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Throughout his Christian life, Paul had known no purpose but this: To apprehend Christ and to be apprehended of Him; and to the very end, this was his unflinching and unyielding purpose.

When Paul said, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith," he was not in liking of in any small or narrow boasting. When he spoke of the crown of righteousness that he felt was laid up for him, he was not speaking of some earthly victor might speak of an earthly bauble or prize; he had in mind the course of the Christian as a conflict with himself and the issue of all noble living as vindication in God's purpose and God's world.

He did not want something for himself that was not for all men, but he believed that the Lord, the righteous judge, would give to every man who had sought the way of right and truth his heritage in the Kingdom.

New Lens Will Help Near Blind Persons

It Has Been Successfully Applied in 29 Cases, Says Doctor

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—(P)—A new type of spectacle lens with a magnification of 300 per cent, brings new hope to the partially blind was described to the American Academy of Optometry, Dr. William Feinbloom of New York said seven children in blind institutions had been returned to public school through its use.

The lens, called a telephoto-magnifier, resembles a glass cone. One inch long, it consists of a combination of from three to five lenses for each eye and is light enough to be fitted into ordinary eyeglass frames.

"It has been successfully applied to 29 cases of optic nerve atrophy," said Dr. Feinbloom, a research fellow at Columbia University.

"The telephoto-magnifier is based on the principle that the optic nerve fibers that lead to the para-central or side areas of the retina can be made to distinguish form upon proper stimulation. The fibers of the optic nerve, which go to the center of the eye are spaced hundreds of times closer together than in other parts of the eye. In an optic nerve atrophy, it is these central fibers which die off."

"Since it is not possible to increase the fibers anatomically in a given unit area from the center of the eye, the converse principle is used; spreading the vision through the use of the telephoto-magnifier over a great many more fibers than ordinary."

The problem was abandoned as hopeless of solution more than 15 years ago, he added, but recently, through the insistence of a 36-year-old patient from Summit, N. J., whose primary optic nerve atrophy when he was five, a new approach was undertaken.

"With this lens," said Dr. Feinbloom, "this man now has sufficient vision to see an automobile a distance of more than two blocks, and to attend moving pictures and read captions. When the lens is adapted for reading, the patient can see any size print. Trained in Braille, he had to be re-educated to read and write."

Dizzy Dean, Ready to Go, Wins Again

Returns to Form in Holding Boston to Six Hits, Wins 7 to 1

CHICAGO.—(AP)—Dizzy Dean gave further proof of his return to consistent winning form Thursday by pitching the Cubs to their fifth straight victory—a 7-to-1 decision over the Boston Bees.

In achieving his fourth triumph of the season against two defeats, Dean limited the Bees to six hits. Boston failed to get a hit until the fifth inning when it bunched three for its only run.

The Cubs pounded two Boston hurlers for 11 hits, Dick Erickson giving way to John Lanning after two innings. Chicago concentrated its attack in the second inning when five hits, including Augie Galan's homer with the bases loaded, accounted for five runs.

"A man wants his daughter to be able to take care of herself if anything unfortunate economically should happen. The great majority of pre-enrollment interviews that we have at the school are with fathers and daughters."

If it seems strange at first that fathers, rather than mothers, are the ones who want their daughters to learn to take care of herself if anything unfortunate economically should happen, remember that fathers are in a better position to know that today a man may go from shirt sleeves to relief in one generation.

Also a man, knowing men, understands that every girl doesn't marry a man who will stick by her all through the years.

Dad Knows Facts of Life

Then, too, perhaps a man realizes better than a romantic mother that a daughter may never marry—and that if she doesn't, no matter how well-fixed her parents are at the moment, her only real security lies in her own ability.

It may be that Dad, who has met a lot of capable, attractive women in the business world, thinks that the girl who works a while before marriage has an edge on the woman who has never stood on her own two feet.

And certainly, no one more than a father wants to know that his daughter need never stick out an unhappy marriage simply because she knows she can't support herself.

Drastic Reduction in Oil Allowable

Commission Reduces Output for Magnolia Section

EL DORADO, Ark.—(AP)—A drastic reduction in the daily allowable for the Magnolia Kerr-Lynn oil field was ordered Thursday by the Arkansas Oil and Gas Commission.

Acting on testimony that there would be 40 producing wells in the area by July 1, the commission cut the allowable from 12,000 to 8,000 barrels daily.

Present proration orders in effect allow each well to produce 300 barrels daily and the new order will reduce output to 200 daily.

In taking the action, the commission invoked for the first time, a clause of a 1939 legislative act which gives the commission authority to remedy "non uniform, disproportionate and unstable" withdrawals from wells.

The order becomes effective July 1. Small operators testified at the hearing that the present allowable was so high that organizations having pipelines to the field could obtain sufficient oil from their own holdings making unnecessary purchases from those not having such facilities.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—With the testimony of a Broadway showgirl and a federal investigator the prosecution presented two more angles of its mail fraud case against William B. Buckner Jr. and his four accused co-conspirators in the alleged manipulation of Philippine railway bonds.

The government rested provisionally, reserving the right to call one more witness.

Through Carol Maurice, Assistant U. S. Attorney William Power Maloney sought to show that Buckner had spent in the city's hot-spots at least some of the money which he had collected from fellow elders of the defaulted Philippine bonds as chairman of their Protective Committee.

Through the day's other major witness, Louis Maged of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Maloney attempted to link Felipe Buenacama, a Philippine legislator and one of the defendants, directly with the alleged conspiracy.

After telling of Buckner's arrest here last December 1 as he stepped from the liner Queen Mary, Maged testified the young promoter had thus explained a letter in which Buenacama was represented as having demanded $50,000.

"You have to grease the palms of those Philippine officials," the government contends that Buckner headed a scheme under which the bonds were to be bought in a low market, and then their rumors were to be spread that the Philippine government would redeem the defaulted securities, thus greatly running up the price.

At the time of his indictment Buenacama was accused by U. S. Attorney John T. Cahill of having agreed to accept a $50,000 bribe to help "engineer" through the insular Assembly the necessary redemptive legislation.

Basket Workers to Return Their Jobs

Strike, Which Broke Out in Texarkana Plant, Is Settled

TEXARKANA, Ark.—(AP)—Members of the Basket Workers Union voted Thursday to accept a proposal of the Two-States Fruit Package Company and return to work Friday.

Negotiations continued to settle differences leading to the strike May 22 at the plant.

G. E. Warren, representative of the International Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners with which the basket makers are affiliated, reported members of the latter union voted to return to work by a 12-to-1 ratio.

He said that the management of the plant, closed since June 6, had agreed to start work in one department Friday and swing into full production as
